Budgerigar Breeding

Red Eyed vs Plum Eyed Chicks in the Nest

For the new breeders who don't yet know about how to recognise what you have in the nestbox by the appearance of a newly hatched chicks eyes.
ind'sLuting, Creaming or Yellowface Albing and Albing all begin with red eyes. This can be seen in a newly habched chick so you know right from the beginning that you have an ino chick. The actual appearance is iden of like they have no visible eye under the skin of the eyelid. Its very much a bright red under the pink of the skin Two ned eyed chicks, and a dark eyed all red eyed
RUM wed Chicks
Flum eyes appear in a nestbox when you have either recessive pied inheritance or cinnamon.
A Plum eyed chick (front) with its dark eyed sibling and the difference between plum and red eyes

Unique solution ID: #1220

Author: Kaz

Last update: 11-Nov-2008 09:33